

Dr. Seuss said it best in The Lorax, "Unless someone like you cares a whole awful lot, nothing is going to get better. It's not."

Case Manager, Winds of Change

"I am a Navy Veteran, graduate student and most importantly a Mom. I grew up in the Appalachian Mountain range in northern New Jersey where I fell in love with nature. This love ultimately inspired my move to Missoula, after just my first visit.

I was raised by a pharmaceutical scientist and a journalist who drove home the importance of social justice, equality and equity, all of which contributed to my decision to become a social worker. I have traveled the world and have experienced and learned from several different cultures which contributes to the diversity of clients I can work with - and better understand - as a social worker.

My experience in the military taught me structure, persistence, adaptability and most importantly humility and resilience. I try to keep myself in a constant state of learning to be able to grow and better serve my client base. My driving force is social justice and giving a voice to those who need it."
